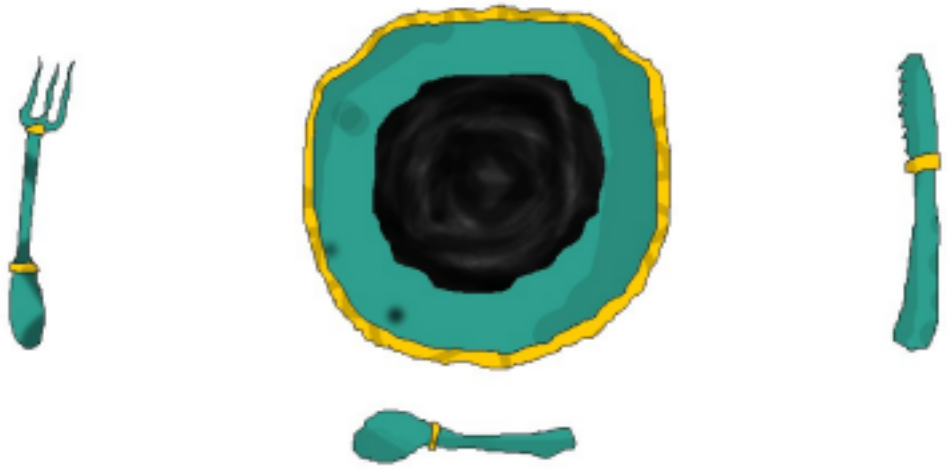
Oshregaal's Feast



Original by Arnold Kemp at goblinpunch.blogspot.com

shared under a
Creative Commons Attribution-ShareAlike 3.0.

Modified for PF2 by Grizzelnit

Most people in the Inner Sea region have heard the name of Oshregaal at least once. He is a powerful chaos wizard who created the armies of Tusk People who now threaten the region of Varisia near the Hold of Belkzen. He now lives in an opulent mansion built into the wall of a great cavern, where he hosts great feasts for eccentric personalities.

The Tusk Clan consists of natural-born humans that have been mutated to artificially gain the physical strengths of orcs. Some of them have other mutations, but all of them are capable of brutal melee attacks.

The details of the rest of the backstory are uncommon knowledge, but not entirely secret:

The Tale of Oshregaal

Once upon a time, there was a young philosopher named Oshregaal. He dabbled in the bizarre arcana of lost empires, impossible physics, fleshwarping, blood magic, and worship of Outer Gods. He dug too deep. He learned too much. In the end, the creature named Grandfather Oshregaal turned out very different from the curious half-orc that first picked up a forbidden tome.

To preserve his own sanity, he extracted some of the eldritch phantasmagoria from his head and stored it in a book. He buried that book, and was very surprised when something grew from it - the Black Wind Tree.

From the tree's fruit, he created the first Black Wind Elixir, a powerful mutagen capable of transforming humans to give them the physical power of orcs. With this alchemical infusion, he won allies who valued power over morals or sanity. These people eventually banded together and became the Tusk Clan.

The mutated people of the Tusk Clan schemed to bring the Varisian outlands under their control. Shunned by Orc and Human societies alike, they gathered power and made foul deals as they pursued their dream of grinding their detractors into the dirt.

But that was 20 years ago. Their great and dreadful quest grinds to a crawl, because Oshregaal, the mad mage who birthed a cruel new breed of people, has retired. He now wants nothing more than to relax, drink, and be merry. In the secure comfort of his home, he collects bizarre oddities and throws feasts for fun, growing old and fat and strange. Each year brings him nearer to death, and yet he chooses to be jolly.

His "Children", the Tusk Clan, still visit him in his magical mansion, built into the wall of an enormous cavern. They marvel at his wealth and his power, and hope to glean some measure of wisdom from his rambling tales, but they cannot grasp their progenitor’s idle hedonism.

There is still a spark left in Grandfather's eyes — a spark of ambition, cruelty, and cold calculating intelligence — but it is subsumed by Oshregaal's new passions: song, wine, and food.

RUMORS

Every PC has heard a rumor about Oshregaal, and just like rumors in real life, some are based in truth and some are total bullshit. Each PC gains one random rumor, which they may share or keep secret as they see fit.

1. Oshregaal makes an elixir that grants immortality.
2. Oshregaal has a powerful and dangerous sphere of annihilation in his mansion.
3. Oshregaal keeps a family of dwarves as slaves.
4. Oshregaal actually lives alone, surrounded by illusions.
5. Oshregaal is actually being controlled by his demonic familiar.
6. Oshregaal died years ago. The current one is either an imposter, an illusion, or undead.
7. Oshregaal is a master of Transmutation and Enchantment.
8. Oshregaal is a master of Divination and Abjuration.
9. Oshregaal is a master of Evocation and Illusion.
10. Oshregaal is a master of Necromancy and Conjuration.
11. Oshregaal is a trained Hematotheurge, able to use his own blood to empower his magic.
12. Oshregaal lives with his beloved older sister.
13. Oshregaal keeps several dangerous pets.
14. Oshregaal communes with three sinister Outsider entities, and each of them has a shrine in his mansion.
15. Oshregaal keeps the Black Wind Tree within his home.
16. Oshregaal has a teleportation circle in his home.
17. Oshregaal is severely allergic to mint.
18. Oshregaal cannot be harmed by normal, non-magic weapons
19. Oshregaal has magically enhanced himself so that he never needs to sleep.

SCHEMES

So why are the PCs at this party anyways? Every PC gets one random scheme to help drive the action, which they may share or keep secret as they see fit:

1. THE DEVIL'S ADVOCATE: Somewhere in the mansion is the weapon of an early Chelaxian Hellknight - the Grey Grin Blade - and the Hellknight order has a standing bounty for its return. The Hellknights are neither good nor kind, but they are paragons of law and order, and as the scariest peacekeeping force on the planet, they make for powerful allies. Find and secure the Grey Grin Blade Blade.

2. THE ANARCHIST: The Augurs of Kaer Maga, the City of Strangers, have divined that Lady Nathema, the new leader of the Tusk Clan, is visiting Grandfather Oshregaal to prepare for a territory-expanding campaign. To preserve the anarchic independence of Kaer Maga, the Augurs have enlisted you to act on their behalf. Capture Lady Nathema so she can be used as leverage against the Tusk Clan, or assassinate her and provide proof of her death.

3. THE OATHKEEPER: Your favorite pious ex-adventurer relative discovered that Grandfather Oshregaal once captured a powerful Celestial Outsider entity to keep as an ironically comedic souvenir. Your relative tried to do something about it years ago and failed. They still resent Oshregaal's casual blasphemy, but are now too old and frail for questing, so you made a promise to finish what they started. Find and rescue the Celestial Outsider, alive and unharmed.

4. THE BOUNTY HUNTER: The ruthless Technic League of Numeria is convinced that Oshregaal somehow managed to obtain a Numerian Android, a rare sentient machine so incredibly advanced that it actually contains a living soul. Sentient or not, the League considers the android to be their sovereign property, and have enlisted you to defend their claim. Find and retrieve the android by any means necessary.

5. THE LUMBERJACK: The Black Wind Tree is what created the Tusk Clan in the first place, and the Elixirs that Oshregaal makes from its fruit is what keeps them powerful. Word of the Tree has reached the druidic lodges of Taldor, and they consider it an abomination and a threat, but are forbidden to take action themselves. Instead, they invoked the Wildwood Treaty for aid, and you answered the call. Find the Black Wind Tree, and destroy it if you can.

6. THE SPY: Very few people of savory repute have visited Oshregaal's estate and returned to tell the tale. Your relentlessly scheming boss at the Aspis Consortium has instructed you to do just that, and he won't take no for an answer. Getting a look inside the depths of his mansion will yield valuable intel and leverage to sell to various factions with money to spend. Discover and verify as many Rumors as you can.

7. THE LIBRARIAN: The great and benevolent scholars of the ancient Magaambya academy resent the negative image of magic users that Oshregaal has caused. Since Oshregaal has ignored all the Magaambya's calls to cease his use of banned arcana and reform his ways, they have called on you to intervene and secure his magical blasphemies. Find and secure Oshregaal's spellbook, and as many other dangerous magical items that you can.

8. THE ALCHEMIST: Word of the Black Wind Elixir has reached the legendary Keepers of the Thuvian Citadel, the most powerful alchemists on the planet. Since it is a unique component, they desire it so that they might learn its secrets and make more powerful compounds, and they're willing to trade a dose of their priceless age-reversing Sun Orchid Elixir for it. Collect at least one dose of the uniquely mutagenic Black Wind Elixir.

9. THE DREAMER: Your slumber has long been haunted by nightmares of a weird and otherworldly insect-like statue. Neither doctors nor priests could give you relief, so out of desperation you hired a back-alley occultist for a divination session. Amidst all the chanting, you could make out only one word - "Oshregaal". It all seemed like a total waste of money…until your invitation arrived. Find the insect-like statue and end your nightmares.

10. THE CHAINBREAKER: Your fellow abolitionists and freedom fighters of the underground Bellflower Network have long suspected Oshregaal to be involved in nefarious deals, banned magics, and missing persons. Since you've received an invite, your faction's leader - known only as The Farmer - has authorized you to take direct action. Secure evidence of Oshregaal's criminal wrongdoing, and liberate any and all captives you find along the way.

11. THE OPPORTUNIST: Surprise! You owe an absolute shitload of money to a gang of ultraviolent criminals! How thrilling! One of your shady friends "found" an invite to some rich guy's party, and you "borrowed" it since it might just give you a chance to buy back your own safety. "Liberate" as much wealth as possible.

12. THE WILDCARD: Surprise! You received an invitation to a party and you have no idea why! Who even is this Oshregaal guy, anyway!? Maybe it was a mistake - but the invite does have your name on it, so you might as well go check it out! You're the wildcard - enjoy the party and do what you want!

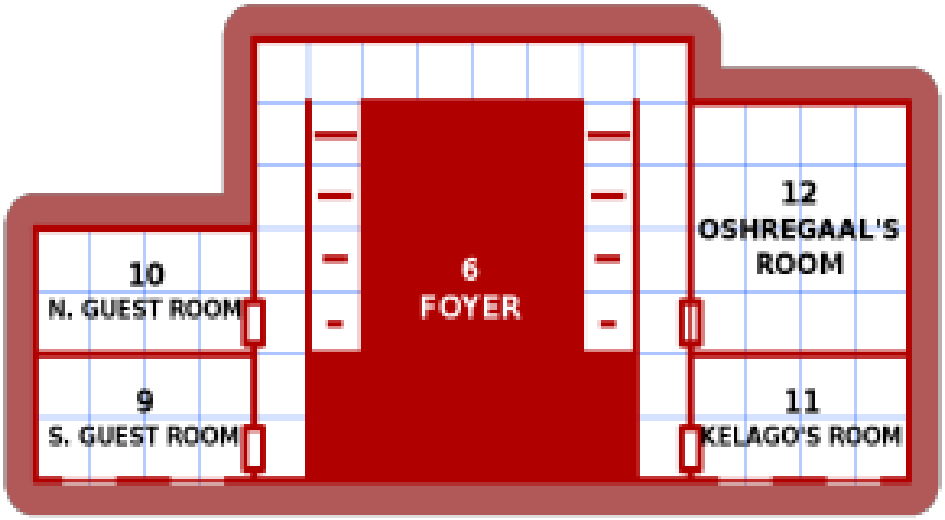
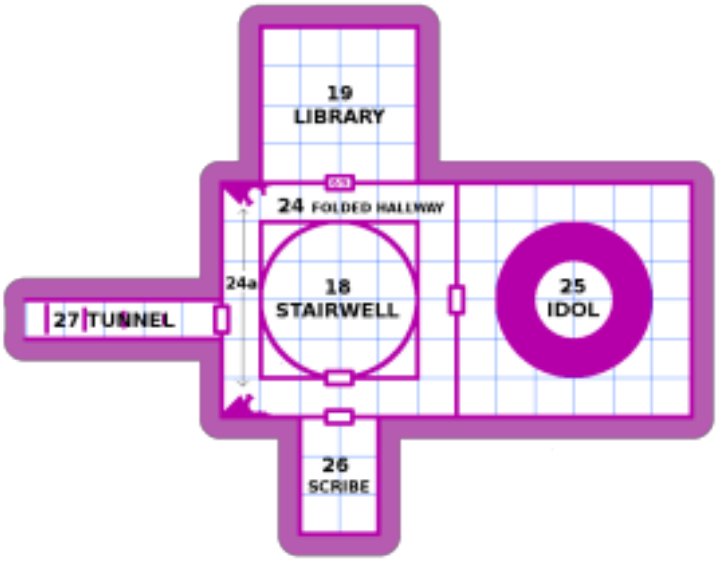
MAPS

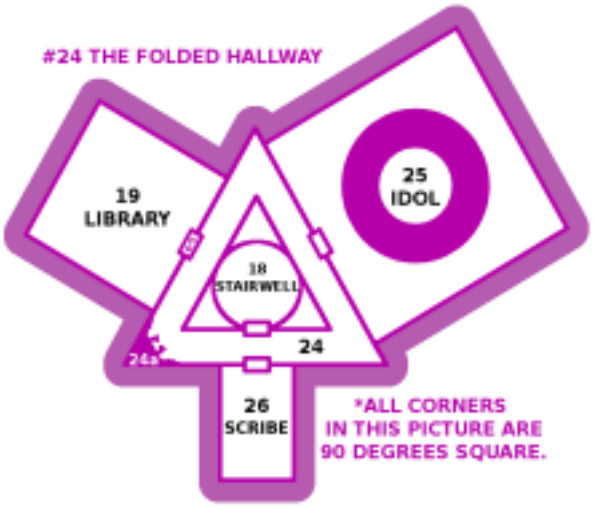
Ground Floor

Upper Floor



Basement (Unfolded and Folded)





1 CAVERN

This is a huge natural cavern. The ceiling is 40' up and covered in stalactites. The ground is uneven, and water collects in calcium-lined pools. A cobblestone path runs up to the enormous white marble stairs, topped with an obvious pair of huge double doors. A faint footpath leads to the northwest, into a gap in the rock filled with huge #2 GARDEN.

Along the far side of the cavern is a large encampment of Tusk Clan warriors. Some are the mobile entourage of the visiting Lady Nathema, some are guards, and some are simply Grandfather's fanatical devotees. There's enough Tusk Clan at the camp to severely fuck up the party, but they are not openly or lethally hostile. They've been instructed specifically not to kill visitors, but if disturbed by curious adventurers they will nonlethally kick their asses and toss them out of their camp.

The north wall of the cave is also the face of the mansion, styled in a gaudy rococo style: pillars, pointed-arch windows, etc. The rest of the mansion is built inside the rock itself. The curtains are drawn on all of the windows. Nine windows surround the main set of double doors, spread across two floors.

All of the windows and front doors are magically enchanted and keyed to Oshregaal, Kelargo, and their three Ogre servants. Oshregaal can suppress these effects at will. If non-keyed people open/break any of them:

1. Automatically activates permanent silent & audible Alarm spells that mentally alerts all keyed users (no password, Stealth DC 30)
2. Also activates a 20' radius Stasis Burst vs non keyed users:
    - Saving Throw Will DC 30; Duration varies. The flow of time congeals around an object or creature, holding it in place. The target must attempt a Will save (an unattended object automatically critically fails its save).
        - Critical Success: The target is unaffected.
        - Success: The target is stunned 3 as time thickens around it.
        - Failure Time ceases to pass for the target for 1 minute. It is invulnerable to all damage, it cannot be targeted or affected by anything, and no rounds elapse for any timed durations, conditions, afflictions, and other effects it has. While in stasis, the target can't be moved, and it remains fixed in place, defying gravity if need be.
        - Critical Failure As failure, but the target is held in stasis for 5 minutes. At the end of each minute, it can Will save to reduce the remaining duration by 1 min, or end it entirely on a critical success
3. A second attempt to exit via window/door will spur Grandfather to remotely Stone Shape all the portals closed, for the "safety" of his guests.

The mansion's first floor sits above ground level. The first floor windows are 10' off the ground; second floor 30'. First floor, west windows lead to the #7 SITTING ROOM. First floor, east windows lead to the #8 OGRE BEDS. Second floor, west window lead to #9 SOUTH GUEST ROOM (these are the only curtains that are open). Second floor, east windows lead to #11 KELAGO'S ROOM. Second floor center leads to the upstairs hall, overlooking the #6 FOYER.

2 OVERGROWN GARDEN

This was once a garden but it is now completely overgrown. 8 statues squat in the shadows between the ferns, each one with a different mutation and expression. Huge Darkland ferns and bioluminescent fungi loom taller than a man and impede progress, acting as difficult terrain and granting concealment.

Hidden in the ferns to the east is a doorway leading to #27 TUNNEL, which leads to #24 FOLDED HALLWAY. However, if the folded hallway is still folded, the passageway quickly narrows to a dead end.

Some of Oshregaal's pets have built a nest in these ferns. A party moving with normal caution has a 50% chance of being attacked by the pets every time they move through the area. What kind of pets? Up to you really. Ideally something that lives/moves/attacks in small groups, has at least one weird lasting status-affecting attack, and ultimately can be defeated with mild to moderate difficulty - cockatrices are a great option.

3 FISHING SHACK

This shack contains fishing equipment. (Oshregaal, Kelargo, and the ogre Wrongus are all avid fishers.) Bolted to the wall is a three eyed shark, awkwardly taxidermied. Its mouth holds fishing hooks. Other items of interest:

- 3 fishing poles, hung on the wall.
- Fishing net, also hung on the wall.
- Blood-stained table that reeks of old fish guts.
- Box with 2 empty vials and 2 vials full of stinking black liquid. (potions of polymorph)
- Galoshes, 2 pair medium, 1 large

Fishing is possible off the dock. It requires baited hooks, or nothing will be caught. There is a 50% chance every 10 minutes spent fishing that a fish will bite. Hooking the fish is automatic. If you hook a fish, roll a d10:

1. The hook breaks
2. Zombie carp (not actually undead, just looks like it)
3. Ghost carp (transparent flesh and bones).
4. Darkland dolphino (cries like a baby).
5. Lying fish (claims to grant wishes, moronic and deceptive).
6. Nightmare squid (ink can be used as wizard ink).
7. Fangtooth (very angry, very fighty, very bitey)
8. Stonefish (poisonous spikes!)
9. Cave Pufferfish (more poison spikes!)
10. The hook breaks.

Stonefish

Perception +7; low-light vision
Skills Acrobatics +7, Athletics +4, Stealth +9
Str +2, Dex +3, Con +2, Int -5, Wis +1, Cha -1
Camouflage The stonefish can Hide in its natural environment even if it doesn't have cover.
AC 16; Fort +9, Ref +6, Will +3
HP 15
Defensive Spines When a creature moves into a space with one or more stonefish, that creature takes 1d4 piercing damage and is exposed to stonefish venom.
Speed swim 25 feet
Melee [one-action] bite +7 [+2/-3] (finesse), Damage 1d6+2 piercing
Melee [one-action] spines +6 [+1/-4], Damage 1d4+2 piercing plus stonefish venom
Stonefish Venom (poison) Saving Throw DC 16 Fortitude; Maximum Duration 3 hours; Stage 1 clumsy 1 (1 min); Stage 2 clumsy 2 (10 minutes); Stage 3 3d6 poison and clumsy 2 (3 hours)

Cave Pufferfish

Perception +4; low-light vision
Skills Acrobatics +2, Athletics +4
Str +2, Dex +0, Con +2, Int -5, Wis +1, Cha -2
AC 12; Fort +5, Ref +3, Will +2
HP 12
Toxic Body Anyone who hits a pufferfish with a melee unarmed attack or a non-reach melee weapon must succeed at a DC 13 Reflex save or be pierced by a spine, taking 1 piercing damage and being exposed to pufferfish venom.
Speed swim 15 feet
Melee [one-action] bite +6 [+1/-4], Damage 1d6+1 piercing plus pufferfish venom
Inflating Rush [two-actions] The pufferfish Swims up to its Speed and then inflates. Each creature within 5 feet of its space at the end of its movement must succeed at a DC 13 Reflex save or take 1 piercing damage and be exposed to pufferfish venom.
Pufferfish Venom (incapacitation, poison) Saving Throw Fortitude DC 16; Maximum Duration 24 hours; Stage 1 1d4 poison damage (1 round); Stage 2 1d4 poison damage and flat-footed (1 round); Stage 3 1d4 poison damage and paralyzed (1 round); Stage 4 1d4 poison damage and paralyzed for 2d10 hours (1 round)

Fangtooth

Perception +11; low-light vision, scent (imprecise) 120 feet, wavesense (precise) 15 feet
Skills Acrobatics +7, Athletics +3
Str -2, Dex +3, Con +2, Int -5, Wis +2, Cha -3
Sunless Sight While in bright light, the fangtooth is blinded and slowed 1.
AC 16; Fort +9, Ref +8, Will +7
HP 25
Resistances , piercing 2, slashing 2
Speed swim 30 feet
Thrash and Bite! [one-action] Each enemy in 5 fit reach takes 1d8 piercing damage (DC 17 basic Reflex save).

4 STAIRS

Huge stairs are flanked by a pair of mundane stone gargoyles wearing festive hats. One gargoyle has a red cloak draped over its claws. Anyone who stands within 5' to the east of the stairs notices the path and door to #5 PIT.

5 PIT

Anyone who approaches within 5' of the east side of the stairs notices the outline of a semi-secret door. Anyone with a Scent feat or a good enough perception check will smell a stink coming from this area. Behind this door is a small room, 5' square. In the middle of this room is a trapdoor with a modest ladder. It reeks of feculent rot. This leads to the garbage dump and cesspool of the mansion, 80' straight down.

This roughly circular cesspool is 80' in diameter, and filled with several feet of filthy sewage water. In the center of the room is a small island made from heaped filth, garbage, and bones (mostly fish bones). On top of this island, someone has constructed a shitty imitation of a dinner table, complete with guests (human, fish, and bat skeletons) and rusted plates atop a table-sized plank. One of the skeletons wears a bracelet worth 50g.

A Otyugh named Slorum lurks here. She is well fed, oddly intelligent, and socially awkward, and spends her days playing with her dolls (the imitation dinner party) and frolicking in the filth. She will hide beneath the muck, observing the interlopers for a while before her curiosity leads her to an introduction. She will only become hostile if anyone acts violent or fucks with her dolls.

For every 10 minutes of digging through the muck, roll a d6: 1 platinum coin, 2 rusted spear, 3 softly glowing skull, 4 oversized crab fork, 5 cheap loot, 6 Turbo Swamp Guts! (Saving Throw DC 22 Fortitude; progression 1 hour; Stage 1 sickened 1 (1 hour); Stage 2 enfeebled 1 and fatigued (1 day); Stage 3 enfeebled 2 and fatigued (1 day); Stage 4 enfeebled 4 and fatigued (1 day))

Hidden in the darkness 80' above is a second hole in the ceiling that leads to the #20 BATHROOM. It is currently blocked by a heavy stone slab, requiring a Strength/Athletics DC 20 to move. Without moving the slab, the toilet seat only gives room for a medium creature to stick an arm or head through (although a Small creature might fit through).

6 FOYER

Rococo style. Red carpet, white pillared walls. Overwhelmingly gaudy. A piano creature hums a baritone opera. 30'' off the ground, an enormous crystal chandelier hangs, worth 1,000g (or 10g if shattered). A coat rack holds two reddish cloaks and one black cloak.

Two mutant ogres dressed as butlers stand guard here: Oggaf who is a quiet grumpy muscle-bound hulk, and Zamzam who is a tall talkative beanpole with two heads. Both ogres will be polite, and will bow when they notice the PCs. They believe that the party is expected (because when you live/work with a wizard you just expect weird shit all the time). They will want to know everyone's names so they can go announce them to Grandfather, who is certainly expecting them at dinner. The butlers will insist they wait in the sitting room to the west, where there are refreshments. If the party resists, the butlers don't put up much fuss about it, but will ask them to stay on the first floor, and Oggaf will watch to ensure that they do.

The party is allowed to move about the foyer and sitting room freely, as long as they behave themselves. Under no circumstances will the party be allowed into the #8 OGRE ROOM by the ogres, but Oshregaal doesn't care. The party will only be allowed up the stairs if Grandfather has given them permission (for example, if they've arranged to stay the night).

The piano creature can only communicate through song. It was once a human, and anyone looking under the lid will see a mess of organs and piano strings. The piano will only become aggressive if attacked or if anyone plays it poorly. It enjoys partnering with a master pianist (such as Grandfather or Kelargo). It will also snap and attack if someone attacks it or bumps into it during a fight (roll a natural 1 near it).

Piano Full of Guts

Perception +8; darkvision
Skills Acrobatics +10, Athletics +10
Str +4, Dex +4, Con +3, Int 0, Wis +0, Cha -5
AC 18 (16 when broken); construct armor; Fort +9, Ref +10, Will +6
HP 30; Hardness 3;
Construct Armor Like normal objects, a figure has Hardness. This Hardness reduces any damage it takes by an amount equal to the Hardness. Once reduced to less than half its Hit Points, or immediately upon being damaged by a critical hit, its construct armor breaks and its Armor Class is reduced to 16.
Speed 30 feet
Melee [one-action] slam +10 [+5/+0] Damage 1d8+4 bludgeoning plus Knockdown or Grab
Spring Forward [two-actions] Jumps up to 30 feet and makes two slam strikes against different targets. It can use Knockdown following this activity, attempting to Trip each creature struck.

Swallow Whole [one-action]attempts an Athletics check opposed by the target's Reflex DC. If it succeeds, it swallows the creature. The monster's mouth or jaws no longer clutch a creature it has swallowed, so the monster is free to use them to Strike or Grab once again. The monster can't attack creatures it has swallowed.
A swallowed creature is grabbed, is slowed 1, and has to hold its breath or start suffocating. The swallowed creature takes the listed amount of damage when first swallowed and at the end of each of its turns while it's swallowed. If the victim Escapes this ability's grabbed condition, it exits through the monster's mouth. This frees any other creature captured in the monster's mouth or jaws. A swallowed creature can attack the monster that has swallowed it, but only with unarmed attacks or with weapons of light Bulk or less. The swallowing creature is off-guard against the attack. If the monster takes piercing or slashing damage equaling or exceeding the listed Rupture value from a single attack or spell, the swallowed creature cuts itself free. A creature that gets free by either Escaping or cutting itself free can immediately breathe and exit the swallowing monster's space.

7 SITTING ROOM

Four couches (leather, lace, canvas, and fur) sit here. In the corner of the room is a fountain of sparkling water, with glass cups stacked near it, obviously meant as a refreshment. A coffee table holds skin-bound folios filled with pictures of butchered farm animals and pure gibberish.

If the couches are observed for more than a moment, you'll see that they are breathing—slowly inhaling and exhaling. If the room is totally silent, the party will be able to hear the couches whispering gossip back and forth. The gossip is inane housewife chatter, mostly regarding the mansion staff, guests, and Grandfather's weight gain. They bleed when injured. If killed, they stop breathing and whispering. Nothing else will alter their behavior.

The water in the fountain is crisp and refreshing, and anyone who drinks it automatically fails all saves against mental spells for the next 3 days.

8 OGRE BEDROOM

Three enormous beds. Racks of ogre-sized butler and chef uniforms. The whole room smells like armpits.

One of the beds has a large object under the sheets; this is a well-cuddled, taxidermied bear with no eyes and a blue nightgown.

In one corner is a 3' tall candle shaped like a woman from the waist down. The candle is halfway burnt down, so presumably it once depicted a full size woman of wax. Nearby is a picture book depicting farm animals and the noises they make. Under one of the mattresses is 22g and some poorly drawn ogre porn. Gross.

9 SOUTH GUEST ROOM

This is an ornate and comfy bedroom done up in the Rococo style. Beds, chairs, nightstands, empty chest, unlit oil lamp, some minor trinkets and pocket change left behind from previous guests. If the party remains more than one day or needs to rest, this is where they'll stay. It truly is a normal room. Really. I swear. There’s nothing inherently dangerous or weird about this room…but that could change depending on what the party does.

10 NORTH GUEST ROOM

This is where Lady Nathema and her bodyguards are staying. She is the acting leader of the Tusk Clan, technically outranked only by Oshregaal himself. She is a berserker and warlord, and has earned the loyalty of the entire clan. She is here on one of her regular trips to buy more Black Wind Elixir, which she uses for the tribes fucked-up initiation rituals. There is a 50% chance that she and her entourage are here; if they aren't, they'll be at the #12 FEAST HALL.

The room has a large bed. Two bedrolls are laid out on the floor. Travel clothes are piled on the nightstand. In the corner, beneath a cloak, is a paper-wrapped treasure chest. The paper is covered with thick blue brushstrokes painted in the shape of eyes, and it is meant to be protective. These are runes known as the Nine Eyes Against Chaos, a powerful chaotic enchantment that protects against chaos (since chaos is often its own worst enemy). Only Grandfather and Nathema know how to remove it safely.

All 1000 gold coins in the chest are cursed. If the wrapping paper is removed, the coins will grow legs, wings, and fangs. They spend one round scrabbling on the inside of the chest before bursting out in a horrible swarm. Only Lady Nathema or Oshregaal can calm the coins after they've begun to swarm.

Cursed Coin Swarm

Perception +9; darkvision, tremorsense (imprecise) 30 feet
Skills Acrobatics +9, Athletics +7, Stealth +9
Str +2, Dex +4, Con +3, Int -5, Wis +0, Cha -4
AC 18; Fort +8, Ref +11, Will +5
HP 30; Immunities grabbed, precision, prone, restrained, swarm mind; Resistances bludgeoning 5, piercing 5, slashing 2; Weaknesses area damage 5, splash damage 5
Speed 30 feet, climb 30 feet
Swarming Bites [one-action] Each creature in the swarm's space takes 1d8 piercing damage (DC 20 basic Reflex half) plus poison.
Poison – Gilded Venom, Fort DC 20 or the bitten area turns to gold. Golden flesh continues to function normally, but becomes much heavier, and each patch of gold weighs 1 BULK.
*Swarm – All targeted damage is reduced to 1. +50% damage from area effects

11 KELARGO'S ROOM

This is where Kelargo lives. She is Oshregaal's older sister, but she doesn't look like it; she magically reversed her physical aging 50 years ago, and now appears to be in her mid-thirties. She appears to be an orc-blooded human, except that her fingers all have an extra joint in them, and her long, black, braided hair hides a fleshwarped stinger-tipped tentacle on from the back of her head. She has a 75% chance to be in this room; otherwise she joins her brother at #13 FEAST HALL.

Kelago sleeps in a living crab bed thing, with a spongy, pink top and a cluster of black eyes on the “backboard”. If there is combat in the room, the bed spends one turn rousing itself before it attacks. Some of this mess once belonged to her “clients”, but most of it is hers. Piles of clothing are stacked in the corners. The floor is scattered with crumb-covered plates and dirty cups. The walls are covered with knives and tools. Only the center of the room is cleared enough to suffice as a work space. If a fight breaks out here, the entire room functions as difficult terrain, and contact with the walls deals 1d4 piercing damage.

Three headless tortoises (no discernable front or back) move slowly through the mess. Their backs are hinged to open like chests.

Kelago makes living furniture. It's her career and her passion, and right now she is halfway through the process of turning a handsome human man into a chair. The party is invited to stay and watch, of course, as long as they sit quietly and don't interrupt. The process involves a great number of specialized knives (103, to be exact), many of which Kelago invented herself. Bones are grown and shaped. Faces are smoothed. Panicked brains are made calm and unaware. Upholstery is merged with flesh. Blessedly, the man appears completely insensate at this point, except for a few occasional involuntary gasps and twitches.

She loves and cares for her weird younger brother, and the feeling is mutual, as they are the only actual family that they have left. It was she who urged him into retirement, and the two sometimes spend the evening fishing at the docks, discussing chaos, the apocalypse, and their childhoods. While Oshregaal is the greater spellcaster of the two siblings, Kelago is no slouch. If she is threatened, attacked or injured, Oshregaal is notified mentally via a permanent Status enchantment, and will immediately provide aid. If Kelago dies, Oshregaal will mourn briefly and intensely, then immediately abandon his hedonistic retirement to lead the Tusk Clan and obliterate all that oppose him.

Her other desire is to transform beautiful people into living furniture, and is always interested in finding new willing subjects. (“How can unwilling flesh become great art?”). All the living furniture in the manor is her handiwork.

- Tortoise #1 holds a vial of wizard ink, a potion of ooze form, and a potion of hole.
- Tortoise #2 is filled with 75g and a yellow Cladis snake (Melee +13, Damage 1 piercing plus cladis poison; Saving Throw DC 19 Fortitude; Maximum Duration 4 hours; Stage 1 1d6 poison damage and drained 1 (1 hour); Stage 2 2d6 poison damage and drained 2 (1 hour); Stage 3 3d6 poison damage and drained 2 (1 hour)
- Tortoise #3 holds her spellbook. The book is alive, has a single eye on the cover, and is capable of crawling like a slug.

Crab Bed Thing

Perception +8; darkvision
Skills Acrobatics +7, Athletics +8, Stealth +7
Str +4, Dex +3, Con +1, Int -4, Wis +2, Cha -3
AC 19; Fort +7, Ref +9, Will +8
HP 24; Resistances physical 3 (except bludgeoning)
Scuttle [reaction] Trigger A creature that the giant crab can see targets the crab with an attack; Effect The giant crab scuttles to the side and gains a +2 circumstance bonus to AC against the triggering attack. After the attack resolves, the crab can Stride up to its speed in a straight line as part of the reaction.
Speed 25 feet, swim 15 feet
Melee [one-action] claw +10 [+5/+0], Damage 1d10+4 slashing plus Grab
Constrict [one-action] 1d6+4 bludgeoning, DC 18
*Sleepy – It takes a full turn to wake up.

12 GRANDFATHER'S ROOM

Instead of a doorknob, this room has a metal hand extending from the door. The door will only unlock when the metal hand is given a firm handshake. Inside is an opulent bedroom, mostly covered in dust.

A nightstand holds a book on chaos theory, along with Oshregaal's original notes (worth 50g). The drawer holds sticks of meditative incense.

In the center of the room, there is an enormous circular bed made of darkwood, with a raised canopy resembling a bird cage, with a line of runes scribed around it. (Someone who reads magic can recognize symbols for “imprisonment” and “death” among them). Sitting on the bed, are a pair of zombie concubines (HD 2), facing opposite directions.

When the zombie concubines notice the players, they will reflexively try to warn them away with flails and snarls (they are incapable of speech). If removed from the bed, they will seek to return to it. If attacked, they will fight, and if the party kills them, they will look relieved. They wear expensive silken lingerie.

The circular bed has four bedposts, each with an emerald facing out. Hanging above the bed, from the inside of the bird cage dome, is incense brazier with four more emeralds on it. These last four emeralds can only be pried off by someone standing on the bed or otherwise occupying the space within the dome.
The bed is a trap. Anyone who touches the mattress (no save) immediately realizes two things:

1. They are definitely 100% cursed.
2. They will definitely 100% die instantly if they lose contact with the bed.

It's possible to use magic to remove the curse, or simply carry a cursed player around on the mattress (but don't tell the players that). All of the hallways and doors are wide enough to at least drag the mattress through taco-style.
If they ever stop touching the mattress, they must save vs Death (Fort DC 20). If they succeed, they are no longer cursed. If they fail, they die instantly. If killed, one minute later, they will rise as a lazy zombie.

Zombie Shambler

Perception +0; darkvision
Skills Athletics +7
Str +3, Dex -2, Con +2, Int -5, Wis +0, Cha -2
Slow A zombie is permanently slowed 1 and can't use reactions.
AC 12; Fort +6, Ref +0, Will +2
HP 20 (void healing); Immunities bleed, death effects, disease, mental, paralyzed, poison, unconscious; Weaknesses slashing 5, vitality 5
Speed 25 feet
Melee [one-action] fist +7 [+2/-3], Damage 1d6+3 bludgeoning plus Grab
Zombie Bite [one-action] Requirements The zombie has a creature grabbed or restrained; Effect The zombie makes a jaws unarmed melee Strike against that creature with an attack modifier of +7 that deals 1d8+3 piercing damage

13 FEAST HALL

At the far side of the huge table sits Grandfather Oshregaal, feasting with a shitload of tusk people. A miserable-looking quasit paces back and forth across the table, chained to a butter dish that he carries. There is a 50% chance that Lady Nathema and her two bodyguards will be here (instead of the #10 NORTH GUEST ROOM). There is a separate 25% chance that Lady Kelago will be here (instead of #11 KELAGO'S ROOM) The wall behind Oshregaal is draped with red curtains, and hides the door to #14 SECRET CIRCLE.

The feast's centerpiece is a whole roasted Ankheg, complete with chisels to get at the succulent bugmeats inside. Some other exotic dishes include: translucent fish stuffed with cheese and condensed rat souls, fermented cerebrospinal fluid, tomatoes, fried cave crickets, and edible candied oozes.

Most of the food is weird, but perfectly healthy and safe to eat - except for the wine. The wine will heal 1d6+1 HP and then cause a random mutation if the drinker fails a Fort DC 14 check. Grandfather will encourage eating, and loudly pretend to be insulted if people refuse, like an asshole. No one gives a shit if the party fills their packs with food - there is plenty to go around, and it never runs out.

Grandfather Oshregaal is a leathery blob of orc-blooded human flesh, covered in perfumed and enchanted silk robes, which themselves are covered in crumbs of food and wine stains. He wheezes when he talks. All of this is deceiving—his flabby hands can summon vast arcane power, his tusks can tear unsuspecting flesh, and while he waddles slowly on his feet, he can magically fly like the wind when he needs to.

Oshregaal is the heart of this dungeon. The first thing to understand about him is this: Grandfather Oshregaal does not give a single fuck about anything except his sister Kelago and himself, and he will not worry about himself unless he actually takes damage. For this reason (and because he barters people/souls for money, power, and influence), he will usually try to subdue, control, or convert his “guests” rather than kill them outright. (Subdued parties are placed in #21 SEALED ROOM).

The other thing to understand about him is that he will never willingly let the PCs leave. If need be, he will use his tusk people, mutant ogres, and especially his mass enchantment spells to make the party remain and behave themselves. He won't try to kill anyone unless he thinks his life is genuinely in danger (unlikely) and would rather blast them with mind magic or have them tied to their chairs and feed them until they promise to be good. He will invent obviously bullshitty reasons for them to stay, and is a consummate liar and manipulator.

Reasons why you can't leave yet:

- Don't be silly, you just arrived!
- You haven't even eaten anything.
- You haven’t eaten enough.
- But you haven’t eaten any of that. You should try that.
- What about you? You should eat more.
- I haven't told you any stories yet!
- You haven't told any stories.
- I like that story! Tell me another one.
- I like that story too! Tell me another one.
- That story was shitty. Tell me a better one.
- You should tell me a story. No, not you, YOU.
- How about a song? I bet you know some songs.
- But, you've always been here.
- YOU! I liked that story from before, tell it again!
- You should stay the night! I have a guest room.
- It would be impolite to not stay the night.
- You should spend another night!
- You should spend another night!
- It would be a shame for a perfectly good guest room to go to waste.
- Seriously, I spared no expense on the guest room.
- But that would make Pazu sad/angry/happy/whatever
- You can't leave now, we're just about to start the Feats of Strength!
- You haven’t heard the story about how I…
- …or the story about how I…
- You haven't given me a gift.
- I like that gift! Give me another one.
- That gift is shitty. Give me a different one.
- What about you? You haven’t given me a gift.
- Leave?! What nonsense! We’ve only gotten started!
- But you said you were having such a good time!
- Yes, you did!
- But you haven't seen my library.
- You haven't read anything from my library yet.
- What about you? You haven't read anything from my library.
- You just can’t.
- I'll tell you why later.
- Because.

The party is, of course, free to explore his mansion if they give a reasonably good excuse (such as “I wish to wander your mansion and gaze upon your wonders.”) No matter what, Oshregaal will send Pazu as a chaperone, who is a dick.

Grandfather doesn't wait for an invitation to speak, and drives any conversation. Some things that he might say:

1. Something ominous, eerie, or vaguely threatening.
2. Expound on the nature of chaos, and invite others to pontificate as well.
3. Laugh way too loud or way too long, or both. His Tusk people will join in.
4. Eat something (or someone!) with surprisingly speed and voracity, then spend a full minute licking his fingers and lips with sloppy, sensual glee.

If the players spend any length of time with Oshregaal, he'll invite them to put a drop of their blood in a cup. He won't tell them why, except to say that they'll enjoy the result. The Tusk people and any other guests will all contribute a drop. After he has collected the blood of everyone who is willing, he'll send a Tusk man to carry the cup to #15 KITCHEN (more details there). The blood will be used to make the favorite meal of Oshregaal, who will then serve everyone their own blood homunculus. He will then invite the party to make a toast to Chaos.

If the PCs truly piss him off, he will order all his Tusk people to drag the party to #21 SEALED ROOM and seal them in. If for some reason some of his Tusk people are killed/disabled, he'll magically call for more from the camp outside. If those run low, he'll teleport in a new Tusk entourage. Grandfather never runs out of Tusk People.

Oshregaal will invent late night entertainment. Possibilities: poetry contests, eating contests, feats of strength, pranking the passed out drunk person, mystery potion drinking contests, the floor is literally lava, etc.

Oshregaal never sleeps, and the party never stops. If the party agrees to spend the night, Grandfather will insist that one of them stay up with him at all times and swap stories. If more than one person does, at least one of these people must sit on his lap. He is very trusting. He'll also tell that person the story about how someone once tried to assassinate him, and how he twisted the man's head clean off and ate it whole. "Can you believe it! What a silly boy! Hahahaha…" (This also works as a metagame tool to explain away absent players/PCs). Whoever does stay up will miss a night's sleep, and will be Fatigued until they get a full rest.

Here's the point of all this: Oshregaal functions as a one-way gate. Entering his home is easy, but getting out is tough, unless your PC actually wants to party endlessly with Grandfather's creepy old crumb-crusted ass.

There are three reliable ways to exit: Open #24 FOLDED HALLWAY and escape the overgrown garden, slog through the cesspool pit beneath #20 BATHROOM, or activate the teleport circle from #14 SECRET CIRCLE. And there's the option of defeating or disabling Oshregaal and his whole fucked-up posse and just walking out the front door… which would be incredibly difficult, but not technically impossible. His spells are potent, and his minions are many, but neither Oshregaal or his posse are invincible. There are things around the property that could wound or disable him, the portrait in #19 could potentially capture him. and of course, the party can gain potential allies, some of which may also possess secret magic weapons.

The Tusk people within the manor are totally enthralled. Some have had their brains blasted by Grandfather's enchantment spells so many times that they exist in a permanent party trance. Despite this apparent stupefaction, they will all respond appropriately if they perceive an obvious threat (such as someone drawing a sword or casting a spell). And of course, they all obey and protect Grandfather with fanatic zeal.

The butter-toting quasit is named Pazu. Pazu is a liar and a douchebag. He and Grandfather hate each other, but the shitty little demon is magically bound to obey him, and Oshregaal likes fucking with him too much to set him loose. Pazu will curse Grandfather's name at every opportunity, and blames Oshregaal for everything bad that has happened to him. He will fly into a rage whenever butter is mentioned. The magics of his binding forbid him from acting against Grandfather in any way, or giving clues about the dungeon. If he chaperones the party, he will attack them if they start breaking or stealing things. His binding also prevents him from fleeing or dying permanently, and so he will begrudgingly fight to the death, knowing Grandfather's magic will simply re-materialize his body the next morning.

Lady Nathema is more fully detailed in #10 NORTH GUEST ROOM. If she is here (50% chance) she will be preparing to negotiate the purchase of more black wind elixir in exchange for gold and more future "guests". She also wants to apprentice under Grandfather so she can try to learn some of his fucked up magical powers.

If Nathema is not there currently, she will arrive later in time for the main course. Over the course of her visit, she will become increasingly frustrated, then infuriated, by Grandfather's constant stubbornness, crude jokes, and unwillingness to plainly talk business. In 1d4 days, they'll conduct their trade and she'll leave in a huff. (That is, unless the players interfere.)

Pazu

CE Tiny Demon Fiend
Perception +9; darkvision
Languages Abyssal, Common; telepathy (touch)
Skills Acrobatics +9, Arcana +6, Deception +9, Intimidation +7, Religion +7, Stealth +9
Str -1, Dex +4, Con +0, Int +1, Wis +2, Cha +2
Abyssal Knowledge When a quasit offers Aid for an Arcana or Religion check, it gets the critical success result on any success and gets the critical failure result on any failure.
AC 19; Fort +6, Ref +12, Will +9
HP 35; Weaknesses cold iron 3, good 3
Virtue Aversion The quasit's link to a mortal soul gave it birth, but it presents a vulnerability. Once per round, a creature can present an object related to something virtuous or good in the life of the quasit's creator (such as a beloved daughter's doll) as an Interact action to automatically deal the quasit 2d6 mental damage.
Speed 15 feet, fly 35 feet
Melee [one-action] claw +11 [+7/+3] (agile, evil,, magic, poison), Damage 1d6+1 slashing plus 1d4 evil and quasit venom
Butter dish +11 [+7/+3], Damage 1d8+1 bludgeon
Divine Innate Spells DC 19 (+4 dmg); 4th read omens; 2nd detect alignment (at will; good only), invisibility (at will, self only); 1st fear; Cantrips (1st) detect magic Abyssal Healing [one-action] (concentrate, divine, healing, necromancy) Frequency once per round; Effect The quasit restores 1d6 HP to itself.
Change Shape [one-action] (concentrate, divine, polymorph, transmutation)
Bat echolocation 40 feet; Speed 15 feet, fly Speed 30 feet; Melee fangs +7, Damage 1d4–1 piercing; Melee wing +7 (agile), Damage 1d4–1 bludgeoning
Centipede Speed 10 feet, climb 10 feet; Melee mandibles +7 (poison), Damage 1 piercing plus 1d4 poison
Toad scent (imprecise) 30 feet; Speed 5 feet; Melee jaws +7, Damage 1 bludgeoning
Wolf size Medium; scent (imprecise) 30 feet; Speed 40 feet, climb 10 feet; Melee jaws +7, Damage 1d10–1 piercing plus Knockdown
Quasit Venom (poison) Saving Throw DC 19 Fortitude; Maximum Duration 6 rounds; Stage 1 1d6 poison (1 round); Stage 2 As stage 1; Stage 3 1d6 poison and slowed 1 (1 round)

14 SECRET CIRCLE

This room is hidden behind the red wall of curtains, and is illuminated by a glowing skull that floats in the air near the ceiling. A bookshelf contains magical tomes. A small cabinet hanging on the wall contains some potions and various magical implements, and a large runed ring on the floor dominates the center of the room.

The books on the bookshelf are Oshregaal's spellbooks, and they are powerfully cursed. The books can be touched or taken, but if a book is opened, it teleports back to Oshregaal's bookshelf. If the person who opened the book fails a save (Will DC 30), they are Drained 1, Clumsy 1, Enfeebled 1, Stupefied 1, for 24 hours, lose all pigmentation (they become black-and-white), and their most recent memories are then transformed into a book which teleports onto Oshregaal's shelf. If a person is reduced to 0 levels by this, they die, and their entire body is turned into a book. A person can regain their lost levels, memories, and color by reading their own book, which takes 8 hours. (If a player falls victim to this, be sure to ask them what the title of their book is.)

Each book actually contains plenty of spells, some powerful and unique, and a great deal of information about chaos magic. However, each book's powerful wards can only be dispelled by plot-level solutions which lie outside the scope of this adventure.

The runed floor ring is actually a teleportation circle (and any spellcaster will recognize it as such). Its security features will send an unprepared user to a random location in the mansion. If the party finds the activation scroll, stands in the center of the rune, and reads the scroll successfully, they may safely teleport out of the dungeon.

15 KITCHEN

A mutant ogre named Wrongus is busy cooking for the feast. He wears a tall chef's hat, which conceals a stunted limb that grows from the crown of his head. A couple dozen bundles of fresh spices hang from the ceiling beam. 4 barrels (half of them are wine, the other 2 are water) and a fresh-caught stack of translucent cave fish. Wrongus is drinking from a jug of something alcoholic and stirring an enormous cauldron, which holds the stew. There's also a shelf full of yet-to-be-candied oozes, struggling to escape their jars.

The stew is the main dish of Oshregaal's meal. For each drop of blood added to the stew, an edible homunculus will form in the broth. They will be imitations of their genetic donors, except tiny and flawed - they are soft, weak, and shitty, and can only flop around and burble mindlessly in their bowl. They will expire within an hour from various congenital defects, and the meal will spoil in 1 day. Oshregaal will only serve this meal once, as the components are rare.

Wrongus is expecting Tusk men to bring him the blood samples. He will add them to the recipe, and a few minutes later, fill up tureens with stew, add a squirming homunculus to each, and send them back to #3 FEAST HALL, where they will be served to the appropriate guest.

Yes, your party members will all have a chance to eat tiny little fucked-up edible versions of themselves. It is actually very beneficial to consume your own homunculus, and will function as the spell Regenerate, but if you eat someone else's homunculus, it functions as the spell Necrotize. That’s bad, by the way.

DM Tip: This is the best time to serve some real life food to your real life players. How about a nice stew? Everyone likes stew.

16 BUG / DEMON

This door is locked. The lock to this door has a bug motif. It is unlocked by the key in the #19 LIBRARY. There are only two things in this room. A statue of a bug, which is real, and Chariadulscha, who is not.

Chariadulscha, also known as He-Who-Counts, is a “dead” Abyssal Demon. Forgotten by the rest of the entire multiverse, he exists only as an immaterial shade, now having only the faintest amount of essence. The statue is the very last remaining vestige of his influence, and his anchor to reality. Only this statue and grandfather's memory of Chariadulscha allows Chariadulscha to exist.

In his current state, he cannot affect the world in any substantial way. Since at this point he is basically a sentient hallucination, he can appear as different things to different people. His preferred forms are a tiny bug and a tiny nearly-naked, squatting old man.

He’s very eager to chat, so that more people might realize his existence. The one thing he possesses is information, but he will not offer it for free. In exchange for one honest answer, he will require someone to swear that they will sow great Chaos upon the world in his name. This could be any number of things: burning down an orphanage, altering the text of a holy book, or ruining the truce between two clans. Let the players suggest their own things. They will have 10 days to do this task.

Whoever accepts this deal will be marked with a bug tattoo on their cheek. Everyday it will crawl closer to their eye. On the last day, the tattoo will reach the player's eye, and Chariadulscha will devour their soul to regain some of his essence, then possess their body. However, if the promise is fulfilled, the tattoo will crawl to a less obtrusive body part and become a non magical tattoo.

17 TROPHY ROOM

Three taxidermied beasts stand on pedestals, and three taxidermied humans stand inside glass cases. A single torch burns on the west wall, 10' off the ground. In the center of the room is an enormous candle, 5' tall and 2' wide. Looking directly at the candle too long makes your eyes bleed. The carpet is plush and red.

- Taxidermied mammoth, hair braided in the tribal patterns of the Doom Braid clan.
- Taxidermied basilisk, missing its eyes. Mice live inside it.
- Taxidermied walrus, embroidered with arcane runes.
- A mummified Chelaxian Hellknight, wearing full plate and clutching a sword that looks like polished lead.
- A mummified berserker of the Sacred Root Clan, clutching his axe, six black arrows lodged in his back.
- A mummified shield maiden of the No Heart Clan, with shield and spear, decapitated. Her head is at her feet, atop a pile of gold coins (500g in all).

The candle is a Calamity Candle, formed from the combined body fat of an entire village destroyed simultaneously via powerful magic. If anyone touches the candle, the fat in their body will begin to burn, dealing 2d6 fire damage per round/contact (Fort DC 18) for half. If the candle is ever lit (gods forbid), that effect occurs on all living creatures within 50' radius of the candle.

The items in the cases are exactly what they appear to be, except for the sword. It is a magical weapon called the Grey Grin Blade (details in appendix B). Getting the armor, sword, or coins will likely require breaking the cases open, as they are hermetically sealed with no doors. When the glass is broken, all the following bad things happen:

- All fires in the room turn a deep crimson.
- The door shuts itself and catches fire. It will not be consumed by the flames. It can be extinguished by anything that would normally extinguish a burning door.
- The Calamity candle casts shadows equal to the number of light sources in the room (the door and the wall torch, at the very least). An undead Shadow crawls out of each of these shadows and tries to kill things.
- The walrus animates and tries to kill things.

18 STAIRWELL

This is a two-story room. The staircase spirals around the exterior of this room. On the first floor is Grandfather's pet Quelaunt. When not feeding, it remains motionless on a pedestal mimicking a statue. Once the party goes past the "statue", it will silently animate. The party can leave the stairwell safely the first time, but the next time they enter the area, they will notice the statue is gone.

From this point onwards, each time the party enters or exits an area, there is a cumulative 10% chance the quelaunt is there to ambush them. It hunts not to kill, but to feast on the tasty emotions of the curious new guests. Once it has done so, it tesseract tunnels away and the chance counter resets. It is the only wandering monster in the mansion, and it's an effective street sweeper to keep the party moving. Grandfather does not allow his bizarre pet to wander the front half of the mansion, thus preserving the guest quarters as a reliably safe haven from severe emotional damage via alien.

19 LIBRARY

This is a two-story library. All of the bookshelves are built into the wall. A stairwell runs up and down the west wall. The books are mostly philosophy, with a smattering of anatomy and insect books. On the second floor, north side, there is a locked case styled in an insect motif. Between the narrow bars, scrolls and folios can be seen.

On the first floor is a desk with an odd, curved lamp. The desk is locked. The lamp is attached to the desk, and has a flexible neck, so that it can be swiveled to point in whatever direction you wish, much like a spotlight. It is styled to look like a tulip atop a narrow stalk. The lamp is currently turned off and pointed at the desk. It turns on with a touch. When the lamp light is shined at the desk, the desk unlocks, revealing a blank spellbook, a vial of wizard ink, a letter opener, a compass, and a bug-shaped key.

A spot on the south wall is curiously missing a bookshelf, exposing a blank section of the wall. The blank spot is a secret door. It will open when lamp-light is shined on it, and close when lamp-light is not.

The bug key unlocks #16 Bug and the locked case in this room. The book case contains six scrolls, a potion of spider/gecko climb, and a mummified cat, clutching a pen. The spells on the scrolls are candle of truth, speak with dead, invisibility, call to familiar spirit, summon, and dominate rats. There's also one Portal Bypass Scroll.

A pair of sheet-covered paintings hang on the north wall, one portrait and one landscape. The landscape painting is a pleasant, lighthearted picture of a pig leaping off a dock into a pond.

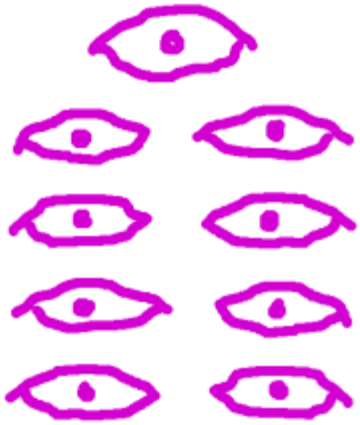
The portrait painting is a trap. If uncovered, it shows a crazed, scraggly man who will reach out of the painting and attempt to grab someone. The person trapped in the painting can reach out (4' reach). Anyone they touch must save or replace them inside the painting.

If the man succeeds in escaping the painting, he will spend 1d3 rounds attacking people out of sheer panic and paranoia. He's a mercenary named Zax, haggard and half-insane from his isolation inside the painting. He can be reasonable when calm but will not willingly consent to re-enter the painting. He came here years ago to kill Oshregaal, and knows Oshregaal's background, abilities, and weaknesses. In a pinch, Zax can function as a spare/replacement PC, or Zax can be replaced with a new PC/player joining mid-game.

20 BATHROOM

It's a bathroom. There's an oversized tub, wash basin, towels, and latrine, which doubles as a garbage dump. The latrine seat is a 3-inch thick stone slab with a 1' hole - big enough for halfling to squeeze through, but not a human, unless the heavy stone slab is lifted (Strength DC 24). The poop chute drops 80 feet straight down to #5 PIT.

21 SEALED ROOM



This room is sealed by four iron spikes and the Nine Eyes Against Chaos is carved into the door.

In the center of this room is a hole that opens into a pit. At the bottom of the pit is a Monster that Oshregaal keeps as a pet. This is where Oshregaal disposes of anyone he has no further use for. If the PCs truly piss Oshregaal off (a difficult task) they'll be taken here and thrown in this pit for Grandfather's bizarre pet to eat/kill.

What kind of monster? Some kind of Big Strong Fucked Up Monster that is several levels stronger than the party and is hard to fight. It should also be capable of killing PCs in some Big Strong Fucked Up Way that makes players IRL go "...oh shit". Thankfully, The Monster is resting, and if woken up, it requires 2 full rounds to rouse itself to activity before it tries to murder the party.

There's literally nothing else inside this room - no secrets, no loot - just Impending Death By Big Strong Fucked Up Monster. The PCs should want to get the hell out of this room as quickly as possible.

22 NURSERY

There is a newborn baby in this room, sleeping in a rustic wooden crib. There is also a large wardrobe.

If the crib is examined, it will be revealed to have tiny runes carved on it. Anyone who can read magic will recognize the symbols for "immutability" and "control". The crib is actually a stasis cell. Anything within it will neither age nor wake up until removed from the crib.

The baby is actually a freshly formed Celestial Outsider. Oshregaal has kept it in stasis in his collection as a cruel joke, and has vague plans for its eventual mutation.

If removed from the crib, the baby will age one year each day (up to a biological age of 20 years) and gain 1 HD each day (up to a maximum of 12 HD). It will also advance as a gestalt entity of fighter, wizard, cleric, and rogue of equal level, with all the features of each class. It can also cast Dominate Creature once per day per HD. At 3 HD, it will take only half damage from non-magical sources. It will also gain intelligence and acquire languages at an incredible rate.

Currently, the baby is a blank slate. It will adopt the morality of those around it, and base its world view on what it witnesses for the first 20 days of its life. If raised by saints, it will end up a righteous and benevolent godling. If raised by thieving murderhobos, it will think that any act is permissible as long as one is powerful enough, and will eventually kill the thieving murderhobos that saved it. No matter what, if it is allowed to grow to adulthood, it will change the shape of the campaign setting, possibly starting its own cult or dominating an existing institution.

The cabinet is very well made and the doors fit together perfectly, and it is fixed to the wall. It contains diapers, baby formula, blankets, and six black cloaks. One of the cloaks holds a rebreather bladder (allows survival in airless environments for 1 hour, requires an alchemy lab to refill). If the cloaks are moved, it will be revealed that the cabinet extends several feet back into the wall, and the back of the cabinet has a small seam running vertically through it and a pair of knobs, nearly identical to the doors on the front of the cabinet.

At the back of the cabinet doors is a small, sealable vent. There is a similar vent on the back wall of the cabinet. In fact, the cabinet is actually an airlock that leads to the next room. Here is how to use it:

- Get inside the cabinet and close the door behind you. Close the vent on the front door. Open the vent on the back door. Allow the pressure inside the cabinet to equalize. Your ears will pop and you will begin to suffocate unless you thought to hold your breath. This is normal. At this point, you may open the doors in the back of the cabinet.
- You can hold your breath for a number of rounds equal to 5 + your Constitution modifier. Reduce your remaining air by 1 round at the end of each of your turns, or by 2 if you attack or cast any spells that turn. You also lose 1 round worth of air each time you are critically hit or critically fail a save against a damaging effect. If you speak (including Casting a Spell) you lose all remaining air.
- When you run out of air, you fall unconscious and start suffocating. You can't recover from being unconscious and must attempt a DC 20 Fortitude save at the end of each of your turns. On a failure, you take 1d10 damage, and on a critical failure, you die. On each check after the first, the DC increases by 5 and the damage by 1d10; these increases are cumulative. Once your access to air is restored, you stop suffocating and are no longer unconscious (unless you're at 0 Hit Points).

Because there is a vacuum on the other side of the door, it is impossible to pull the inner doors open. The only other way to get into the next room is to smash the inner doors, but that is a terrible idea.

If the doors are smashed, the air in the nursery will be sucked into #23 TREE as the airlock explosively decompresses. Everything and everyone in the nursery will automatically take 1d10 damage and be knocked prone. If they fail a Fort DC 18 check, they are deafened as their eardrums are blown out. People in the nursery can prevent being sucked into #23 TREE if they make a Ref DC 20 check. The baby and the crib will be sucked into #23 TREE, but the baby will take no damage. (Although, it'll probably be destroyed by the Tree unless someone saves it.)

23 THE TREE

This is where the Black Wind Tree grows. The whole room is an airless vacuum by design. There is an alchemical contraption holding a vial of golden liquid - concentrated black wind mutagen, freshly distilled from the fruit of the tree. There is also an iron chest, bolted to the wall. The whole thing is tended to by a pair of tusk people, mutated to survive in the airless environment. The Tusk people wear cow skull gas masks, and two intestine-tubes run into their noses from an air bladder on their back (looks like a gelatinous hunchback). There is also a Mi-Go, disguised as a humanoid. It’s a visiting houseguest, and spends all its time in this room studying the tree. It will not attack unless the party damages the airlock or the Tree.

If the room persists as a total vacuum, and the party uses the airlock-cabinet as intended, a person can survive in there for as long as they can hold their breath before beginning to suffocate.

If the party smashed their way through the cabinet or otherwise upset the airlock, the resulting explosion destroys the alchemical contraption and the attached vial, and knocks the Tusk people prone. The incoming rush of air grants air to breathe, but also enables the Tree to use its wind abilities with terrible, destructive abandon.

The iron chest is locked and trapped. A person triggering the trap is allowed a save to avoid getting stuck by a poison needle (Stupor Poison: Saving Throw DC 20 Fortitude; Maximum Duration 6 hours; Stage 1 slowed 1 and flat-footed (1 round); Stage 2 slowed 2 and flat-footed (1 round); Stage 3 unconscious with no Perception check to wake up (1 round); Stage 4 unconscious with no Perception check to wake up (1d6 hours)). The chest contains black wind elixir, a potion of ooze control, and a potion of antigravity.

Anyone drinking either of the black wind elixirs gains permanent: +1 Strength, grows tusks, takes -4 to the save against any spell cast by a demon or aberration, and can use Rage (as a barbarian).

The Black Wind Tree is a dark grotesque pillar of flesh that runs from the floor to the ceiling. It's a single lumpy trunk composed of bundles of fleshy tentacles, stunted appendages, and misshapen faces. Golden polyps (unripe fruit) hang off the side of it. It writhes and gnashes constantly.

Black Wind Tree

CE Huge aberration (air)
Init +6; Senses darkvision 60 ft.; Percep+26
Aura frightful presence (90 ft., DC 20)
AC 22
hp 200
Fort +13, Ref +12, Will +16
Defensive Abilities: deflecting winds; DR 10/magic and slashing; Immune acid, cold, sonic;
Weaknesses vulnerable to electricity
Melee 4 tentacles +21 (1d8+9/19–20 plus grab)
Space 10 ft., Reach 10 ft.
Special Attacks constrict (1d8+9), sucking wind, wind blast
Spell-Like Abilities (CL 14th; concentration +19)
At will—alter winds, gust of wind (DC 17), whispering wind
3/day—control winds (DC 20), river of windAPG (DC 19), wind wall
1/day—control weather, whirlwind (DC 23)
Statistics
Str 28, Dex 15, Con 24, Int 19, Wis 20, Cha 21
Base Atk +13; CMB +24 (+28 grapple); CMD 42 (can't be tripped)
Feats Combat Reflexes, Dodge, Improved Critical (tentacle), Improved Initiative, Power Attack, Vital Strike, Weapon Focus (tentacle)
Skills: Knowledge (engineering) +22, Knowledge (history) +22, Knowledge (nature) +22, Perception +26, Spellcraft +25, Use Magic Device +23
Special Abilities
Deflecting Winds (Su) The Tree's mastery over air and wind allows it to surround itself with blasts of precisely aimed gusts, granting the creature a +5 deflection bonus to its Armor Class and a +4 resistance bonus on Reflex saving throws.
Sucking Wind (Su) The Tree creates a zone of negative air pressure to slow a creature's escape. Activating this ability is a full-round action, and it must concentrate each round to maintain the effect. The sucking wind manifests as a 100-foot-radius spread, with the Tree at the center. Each round the Tree maintains concentration, the sucking wind's radius increases by 100 feet, to a maximum radius of a mile. It can detect creatures within this area via tremorsense. As a free action, it can increase the effects of the sucking wind on up to five different creatures within the area at one time. Each targeted creature must succeed at a DC 20 Fortitude save each round it remains in the area of the sucking wind or it is slowed until it leaves the area. A creature already under the effects of any slowing effect (such as from this sucking wind or a slow spell) that fails this save is held in place for 1 round—it is not helpless, but cannot move via any means. Freedom of movement protects against the effects of the sucking wind, and control winds negates its effects in the area of effect of the control winds spell. Natural windstorms or other powerful winds have no effect on a sucking wind. The Tree can activate a sucking wind once daily, and can maintain concentration on the effect for up to an hour.
Wind Blast (Su) Once every 1d4 rounds as a standard action, the Tree can create a powerful explosion of flesh-scouring wind in a 30-foot radius burst centered on itself. All other creatures within this area take 6d6 points of bludgeoning damage (DC 24 Reflex half). In addition, these winds can blow away creatures as tornado-strength winds (Pathfinder RPG Core Rulebook 439).

24 FOLDED HALLWAY

If this is your first time using non-Euclidean spaces, you may want to read this section multiple times.

This hallway has two forms. The first is a square hallway that functions pretty much the way you'd expect a square hallway to function. This is the “unfolded hallway”. The NW and SW corners each have half of a Yog-Sothoth statue in them (see #24a). Currently however, the hallway is in its “folded” form. The entire west quadrant of the hallway has been removed from reality, and the north quadrant and the south quadrant have been joined at their west end.

This creates a three-sided square. All of the hallways are straight, all of the corners are exactly 90 degrees, and yet there are only three corners, and only 3 sides. When the hallway is folded, the two halves of the Yog-Sothoth statue are joined.

YOG-SOTHOTH SHRINE

Built into the walls of this corner is a large iron statue of a squatting misshapen humanoid with a tentacle for a head. A Religion/Planar DC 20 reveals this to be an idol of the Outer God Yog-Sothoth, The Watcher at the Threshold - a dark and obscure concept-entity of twisted alien space outside of space and time outside of time. It is perched on a podium like a gargoyle and holds out its two palms, which have been smoothed over by the touch of many hands over many years. Anyone examining the statue will see a faint seam running through the statue that continues across the whole corner and floor of the hallway, from the inside corner to bisect the statue. It looks like two halves of a statue were forged separately, then joined.

Standing near the statue, one gets a terrible sense of pressure, and lingering in front of the seam for more than a moment sends sharp pains through your body, as if your skull were being twisted and your skin stretched in two directions.

This statue is what keeps the folded hallway folded. If the hands of living creatures are ever touched to Yog-Sothoth’s two palms, the folded hallway will unfold. Anyone unfortunate enough to be standing directly in front of the statue when this happens takes 20d6 force damage (Fort DC 30 half) as the folded space of the fourth hallway violently unzips itself. If this is enough to reduce the person/s to below 0 HP, they are instantly killed, torn in half, and scattered across the fourth hallway. The trick is to have two different people stand to each side of the statue and touch the palms; a single person pressing both palms would necessarily be standing in front.

After unfolding, the two halves of the statue will be in two different corners, revealing Yog-Sothoth's cross section (he is full of ENDLESS NOTHING). Anyone standing to the left of the statue ends up in the SW corner. Anyone standing on the right ends up in the NW corner. This allows access to #27 TUNNEL.

25 IDOL

This door is lock-able, but unlocked. The lock resembles a circle of fangs. (This is one of the many symbols of Lamashtu, Mother of Monsters, and First Demon-Goddess of the Abyss).

In the center of this room is a circular pit with a raised platform in the center, accessible with a 10' jump. On the platform is a 9' tall metal idol statue of a pregnant jackal-headed woman with three ruby eyes, holding an empty goblet and a scimitar. Each ruby eye is worth 500g.

The statue is hollow and filled with pressurized poison, and the rubies are actually plugs. If a ruby is removed the gas inside the statue will begin to escape. Anyone prying one out will be hit full in the face, and the room will fill with gas in 5 rounds.

Enervation Gas: Saving Throw DC 28 Fortitude; Onset 10 minutes; Maximum Duration 6 minutes; Stage 1 fatigued (1 minute); Stage 2 5d6 poison damage and fatigued (1 minute); Stage 3 6d6 poison damage, fatigued, and paralyzed (1 minute)

In the pit are swarms of Brood Leeches. They will attack anything that enters the water. If any of the rubies are taken from the statue, they will begin crawling out. It takes them a full round for any to climb out of the pit, but 1d4 of them will arrive each round after that.

Brood Leech Swarm

N Large Animal Aquatic Swarm
Perception +9; blood scent, low-light vision, scent (imprecise) 100 feet
Skills Acrobatics +8, Athletics +6 Speed 10 swim 30 feet
Str +1, Dex +3, Con +2, Int -5, Wis +2, Cha -2
Blood Scent The swarm can smell blood in the water from up to 1 mile away.
AC 14; Fort +7, Ref +8, Will +5
HP 25;
Immunities precision, swarm mind; Resistances bludgeoning 5, piercing 2, slashing 5; Weaknesses area damage 5, splash damage 5
Feeding Frenzy [one-action] Each enemy in the swarm's space takes 2d6 piercing damage (DC 18 basic Reflex save). A creature that fails the save also takes 1d6 persistent bleed damage and takes a –2 circumstance penalty to their Reflex saves against Feeding Frenzy while this damage continues, as the frenzy increases in intensity when they smell blood.

26 SCRIBE

Here is a writing desk, some office furniture, some bedroom furniture, a painting of Oshregaal when he was younger, a trio of astral peacock feathers hung on the wall (which make you feel slightly detached from your body when you look at them), and the scribe, Plum.

Plum is a Numerian android, a synthetic life form with a soul, created via mysterious long ruined technology from beyond the stars. Her skin and hair are dark, her eyes are purple, and in the right light you swear you can see faintly glowing, pulsating lines beneath her skin. Oshregaal regularly wipes her mind as part of his fucked up memory experiments, so she knows little about the dungeon or anything else, really. Plum knows this, so she secretly communicates with herself via written notes, compiled in a big folio labeled “memories”. She has been held captive by Oshregaal for years, and wants to kill him and/or escape.

She is intelligent and capable, but naive and socially inexperienced. She possesses an enchanted crystalline blade hidden within her forearm beneath her “skin”. If the blade is held in bright light in just the right way, a faint beam of light will appear. Plum knows about the blade and what it does, but does not know the beam points toward Silvermount, the place where she originated. She knows she is different, but has no memories of her creation and very few memories of her existence before this place. In a pinch, she could make a good replacement PC.

Her desk contains forged signet rings of regional nobility and a great number of letters, most detailing clandestine business deals of drugs, slaves, and Black Wind Elixir. A false-bottom drawer contains Plum’s memory folio (including vague, shitty plans to defeat Oshregaal, and ideas to plug her ears to resist his enchantments.), a small bag containing some improvised supplies and weapons, and a small hunk of soft wax, enough for one humanoid to plug up their ears (she will not share it)

27 TUNNEL

If the #24 FOLDED HALLWAY is unfolded, this is just a stone tunnel that leads to #2 FERNS. If the #24 FOLDED HALLWAY is still folded, this will not even exist inside the manor, and from outdoors, it will be a stone tunnel that narrows to an infinitely small width.

APPENDIX A – UNIQUE WEAPONS AND ITEMS

Adamantine Shield Ring – When worn on a finger, the whole hand and forearm becomes as durable as adamantine, allowing you to use your own hand as a shield, stick it into fire, etc. If you are using it as a shield, and the attacker rolls a natural 1, you can choose to either break their weapon in half or disarm them.

Grey Grin Blade – This greatsword +2 is made from alchemical lead. Alchemical lead has the property of being very light while retaining all of its mass. (It is light to pick up, but heavy to swing, and deals damage as if one size larger) Presumed lost, this sword was once the property of an early Chelaxian Hellknight. If the Hellknights hear it has been rediscovered, they will be eager to recover it, as the sword is sacred property. Whenever the wielder crits with this blade, two of the wielder's fingers turn gray and they get a permanent cumulative -1 penalty to all Reflex saves (up to a max of -5).

Once they've gotten this result 5 times, their hands and forearms will be gray and their entire body will start to appear haggard. They will be charmed by the blade, unwilling to give it up, and willing to do anything to recover it if it is lost.

Once they've gotten this result 10 times, their entire body will be gray with a leaden sheen, they will gain DR/2 and they will be accompanied by a permanent unseen servant effect. Additionally, the sword can ignore armor x5/day

Potion of Antigravity – Reverses the effect of gravity on the drinker for 2 hours.

Potion of Hole – When poured out, it makes a hole 6” wide on a surface not thicker than 1'. Has no effect on surfaces thicker than 1'. Works on any flat surface, not just floors.

Potion of Mutation – Drinker gains a mutation. No save.

Potion of Jaunt – If you run at something and slam into it at full speed, you don't slam into it. Instead, you teleport 5 feet forward. You can be shunted a couple of feet, but if there is no open space within that range, you are shunted backward 5 feet, knocked prone, and take 2d8 force damage.

Potion of Regeneration – You regain 1 HP every 10 minutes for the next two hours.

Potion of Soul Distillation – Instantly kills the drinker and refills the vial with their soul distillate. Anyone else that drinks the soul distillate instantly dies, their body transforms into the original drinker. Among other things, this can be used to rid a character of any mutations they might have.

Scroll of Activate Portal – Everything atop a teleportation circle is teleported to the circle's set destination.

Scroll of Summon Swine – Summons a pig that will obey simple commands. Vanishes after 10 minutes.

APPENDIX B – BIOMANCY

Biomancy is a sub-school of transmutation magic that specializes in physical transformations, experimental mutations, natural toxins, and oozes.

Signature Spells:

1. Adapt Self
2. Acidic Burst
3. Puff of Poison
4. Pest Form
5. Animal Form
6. Humanoid Form
7. Grisly Growths
8. Untamed Shift
9. Ooze Form
10. Bestial Curse
11. Unusual Anatomy
12. Regeneration

APPENDIX C - HEMOTHEURGY

Hemotheurges — commonly known as bloodmages, and derogatorily referred to as bloatmages — are arcane spellcasters who follow the old aphorism that “magic runs in the blood” and take it to the extreme. By magically overriding their bodies’ natural processes in order to produce and hold more blood, hemotheurges are able to greatly increase their magical abilities, but at the cost of their bodies becoming bloated masses of grotesquely engorged flesh.

Hemotheurges are dedicated spellcasters, often operating as heavy artillery in battle, but their potential to run amok when heavily stressed can make them nearly as dangerous to their friends as to their enemies. They have no particular alignment, but their single-minded focus on the goal of attaining greater magical ability and personal power (and the public’s misunderstandings of blood-related magic and general abhorrence of ritualistic self-mutilation) tends to make them some variety of Neutral.

Even more significant than cosmetic changes, the stresses on a hemotheurge’s body can prove dangerous to them and those around them - if the cephalic pressure on the mage’s brain becomes too great, they can fly into a murderous rage before falling unconscious and bleeding out. Such obvious drawbacks keep most from walking the path of the bloated scholars, but the hemotheurges dismiss their detractors as cowards that lack the courage to follow in their footsteps, noting that in the pursuit of power, all other concerns are secondary.

Signature Spells:

1. Blood Duplicate
2. Bloodspray Curse
3. Call the Blood
4. Sanguine Mist
5. Blood Feast
6. Vampiric Exsanguination
7. Boil Blood
8. Disintegrate
9. Telekinetic Bombardment
10. Massacre
11. Implosion

Blood Pool: At 1st level, a bloatmage gains a pool of blood points, representing an overload of her system with excess blood to extend her arcane abilities beyond their normal level. A bloatmage’s normal pool of blood points is equal to her bloatmage level. Blood points can be spent at the time of casting to cast a spell without using that spell’s spell slot. The spell slot remains unused (for spontaneous casters), or the spell is recalled as if it had not been cast (for spellcasters who prepare spells). Retaining a spell or spell slot in this manner costs a number of blood points equal to the spell’s level, and these points must be spent at the time of casting. Blood points do not give spellcasters access to spells they don’t already know or have prepared.

In addition, the bloatmage may push herself via her bloat ability in order to gain a number of extra blood points, but such exertion is a dangerous gamble. If the bloatmage's current number of blood points is greater than her class level but less than or equal to twice her class level, she gains the sickened condition. If her exertions push her beyond twice her normal blood point level, she immediately flies into a homicidal rage, striking out randomly with her most damaging attacks and abilities at friends and foes alike for 1d6 rounds or until her blood pool is reduced to 0 (whichever comes first). At the end of the rage, her blood points drop to 0, her hit points drop to –1, and she begins dying.

Each day, when the bloatmage rests to regain spells, she regains blood points up to her class level but not beyond (so if her bloatmage level is 5 but she currently has 8 points, she remains at 8 until she spends the extra points).

Some bloatmages conduct constant rituals involving leeches or exsanguination in an attempt to regulate their systems. These rituals, which must be undertaken daily during spell preparation, give the bloatmage the option of subtracting 1 point from any bloating rolls (see below) after the results are known, but at the price of a non-cumulative –2 penalty to Constitution. This penalty cannot be removed, save by the bloatmage abandoning the rituals for a day (also during spell preparation), which removes it immediately.

Bloat: A bloatmage can exert herself as a free action to instantly gain extra blood points, but doing so puts her at risk of a dangerous collapse. At 1st level, the bloatmage can bloat once per day to gain 1d4 points. At 4th, she can bloat twice per day, and the die roll becomes 1d8. At 8th, she can bloat three times per day, and the roll becomes 1d12.

Hemophilia: Bloatmages are particularly susceptible to bleed effects, and the DC of any Heal check made to stop a bleed effect is 5 higher than normal. In addition, anytime a bleeding wound is inflicted on a bloatmage, she loses 1 blood point. This loss of blood points is cumulative for multiple bleed attacks, but not each time she takes damage from the same attack.

Corpulence: At 3rd level, a bloatmage becomes so massive that her rolls of fatty, blood-laden flesh grant her a +1 natural armor bonus. At 7th level, this bonus increases to +2 but reduces her speed by 10 feet. This penalty stacks with the penalty from the Bloatmage Initiate feat. This reduction in speed can never reduce the bloatmage's speed below 5 feet, nor does it affect magical flying effects.

Absorb Bloodline: At 10th level, a bloatmage can temporarily access all of the bloodline powers of a given sorcerer bloodline as if she were a sorcerer of a level equaling her total arcane spellcaster level (including bloatmage levels) by consuming blood tied to that bloodline. By drinking 1 pint of fresh blood (which inflicts 1 point of Constitution damage) from a sorcerer with the given bloodline or from a creature aff iliated with that bloodline, the bloatmage gains the ability to use the bloodline powers (but not bonus spells, proficiencies, and so on) as appropriate to her level for 1 hour. This ability is usable once per day and drinking the blood normally requires a full minute, but bloatmages with the Brew Potion feat can distill the blood into a potion-sized draught that can be stored and consumed as a standard action.

APPENDIX D - ELDER MYTHOS CULTISTS

Typically covetous, secretive, and thoroughly mad, Elder Mythos cultists open their bodies and minds to horrifying realities not meant for sane mortals as they strive to prepare the world for their incomprehensible alien masters. Bartering sanity for unspeakable knowledge and the ability to tap into the unthinkable void between the stars, an Elder Mythos cultist tends to compensate by propping up their crumbling sanity with a darkly erratic personality.

Signature Spells:

1. Void Warp
2. Tentacular Limbs
3. Grim Tendrils
4. Aberrant Whispers
5. Countless Eyes
6. Deepsight
7. Gravity Well
8. Translocate
9. Eclipse Burst
10. Devour Life
11. Phantasmagoria